Hi Mike,

Can you post the file on Mr. Corder and/or the Kansas missing persons?
Thanks!

Hi Andre,

Isn't this Fred Bell the one who claims to have worked with Werner von Braun? He also claims to be in contact (and it sounds like romantic contact, to me!) with Semjase of Meier fame.

I'm skeptical....

Hi Robert,

The newest issue of TIME magazine (Sept. 23) has a page-long story on David Chorley and Douglas Bower, but it's great to hear from you because you are right there.

Anyway, I'll copy this little bit from the article and see if you have any more to add:

"Delgado's exultation (at seeing the circle) was soon cut short. Graham Brough, a reporter from the London tabloid TODAY who had alerted Delgado to the latest apparition, introduced him to two landscape painters,...(our boys). They had created the Sevenoaks circle while Brough looked on." It went on to say that they had been doing this for the past 13 years, amking as many as 25 to 30 new circles each growing season.

Sure sound like some attempt at disinformation to me!

Robert, if you want a copy of this story, just post an address, and I'll air snailmail it to you.

Best regards,

Linda Bird

Subject: Donna Butts of Russell, Kansas

Date: 29 Sep 91 04:01:00 GMT

Here's some information on Donna Butts, who is considered a "contactee."

(No date given for this event.) She was driving with her mother-in-law and young sons toward Kansas City to see Donna's husband in a hospital. It was after midnight when she left home and is now the wee hours of the morning on I-170.

Shw was following a larlge truck and as she rounded a curve in the highway she saw a huge UFO sitting beside the road. The truck driver has already seen it. The moment Donna's mother-in-law saw the UFO, she panicked and stepped on the gas. Donna looked out the back and saw a green light, a beam that hits the highway just behind the car. The mother-in-law passes the truck and as she does, the green light follows to hit the truck. The truck disappears! There is no trace of the truck or any sign that it was ever there.

The women and children speed on, stunned by the sight. Soon they [assed a group of military vehicles parked beside the highway. When she tells her husband, he tells he to keep quiet. "Probably some kind of military thing," he says.

Later in a newspaper, Donna saw 2 short articles. One reports that several people reported seeing a UFO about the same time she did. The other tells about a missing truck being located in the middle of a large field, but the driver has not been found.

This article goes on: Donna started being contacted by being from another existence (it says). There are boardings on a UFO. Lessons from the contacts, and projected events for the future. There are repeated visits from visitors in human form--one materializes right in from on Donna's daughter. The small girl calls him a "starman" because he seems to be made up of tiny start lights. Many messages have references to the Bible.

That's about it. (By the way, I posted this for information. Please do not consider me a Donna Butts advocate.)

nc>'There is no telephone nc>number for MBF' (a funny sort of news agency !) (2) They didn't know the nc>address of MBF (3) the story had been marked 'Copyright MBF Services' to nc>prevent others publishing copyright material (4) we could reprint whatever we nc>liked without charge (5) MBF had an address in Shepton Mallet (6) a contact nc>number for MBF was 0962 - 713843 on the Twyford (Winchester) exchange.

A funny sort of news agency indeed! Personally, I must wonder about the Today program -- do they routinely give out permissions to reprint other people's copyright material? Or do they do it only with material they broadcast from news agencies without telephone numbers???

nc> The Shepton Mallet address is an accommodation address with a firm of nc>chartered accountants who have MBF as a client. Describing it as a nc>'Scientific Research and Development Company', they would tell us no nc>more details about their client. The Twyford number had been discontinued by nc>last week, and enquiries to British Telecom revealed equal confusion. It nc>was descibed first as a private residential number, and then as a 'special nc>exchange number'.

A very special exchange, I'll bet.

nc> Solicitors searches have now revealed that the director of MBF is a certain nc>Andrew Winsloe Clifford of Maiden Beech Farm, West Crewkerne, Somerset. This, nc>of course, solves what MBF stands for, but we still need to find out about Mr nc>Clifford. He and his wife are sole shareholders and the company was first nc>registered in April 1991. No accounts have been returned so far.

Nor will they be, I'll bet. Any wagers that MBF goes bankrupt before next April?? Or, alternatively, that the Chartered Accountants go bankrupt before next April?? Or both???

MOD will need to set up a more plausible entity to debunk the circles by next planting time. Unless they decide to keep their heads down for a year until this blows over.

Still, Maiden Beech Farm of West Crewkerne sounds lovely, doesn't it? Too bad Mr. Clifford & his wife have to move away now. Perhaps they'll go back to Wiltshire. Somewhere close to RAF Rudloe Manor. It's very pretty, too.

Robert, thank you for your continued excellent reporting of this thickening plot! I hope you can continue to chase down the details of this public-relations debacle in the coming months -- follow-up on MBF, its principals, the accounting firm, and the hoax hoaxers could lead us to some very interesting revelations.

Personally, I wish that the UFO groups of the USAF, RAF, RCAF, RAAF, and the (former) Soviet Air Defense Command could all sit down with the Belgian Air Defense Command and get knee-walking drunk together. Wouldn't it be wonderful if they just commiserated for 12 hours and then decided to tell the truth???

In vino veritas,
Clark

Subject: Ogden objects
Date: 29 Sep 91 16:45:00 GMT

Hello Sheldon,
The points in your message about those Ogden Objects are well taken. I will try to address each.

First, I do NOT yet have those photos. Guy Kirkwood had said he would send me photocopies of the original color photos he has (Linda Bird has seen Guy's photos, so I'm assuming they do exist) but he has not yet sent them to me. I asked for the photocopies of the photos first before endorsing the expenditure of making photographic copies of them. (Why? You'll see in a sec when I explain about OMNI.)

Right now I know of only one other person who says she has photos of the same object. Jim Speiser knows her too -- Cheyenne -- and perhaps it is her photos he's planning to digitize, since I have not yet received the photos myself./

This person also told me that she would send me a copy and never did, but I think it's more a matter of her having so many things going on at this time that she's too busy to get to it rather than a deliberate evasion. If two different people own copies of the photos and a third person has seen those copies, then there is some small evidence those photos actually exist, though it's not hard evidence or absolute proof (when I see them myself, then I will be able to say they do exist.) What I have seen is a drawing Linda Bird made from the photo Guy Kirkwood showed her at the Beckleycon (sp?) a couple of weekends back.

If the photos exist and actually depict the objects described and drawn, that lends some evidentiary weight to the story, but the fact that the original source is so difficult to reach makes me wonder too. I have not yet spoken to this mysterious person, though I have talked to a person who claims to know this mystery man and to have spoken directly with him. The story is that the guy is afraid he'd lose his job if he's connected to the tale, so I've offered complete anonymity if he'll let me speak to him directly, but so far no result.

Re the OMNI question. You said you'd heard they're on the story. So has everyone else -- except OMNI's editors. I write for Omni and have been assigned to do this story for them and they tell me they don't know who the supposed Omni writers who "everyone says" have been on this story since it began might be. Could be people working on spec, could be failure to communicate between editors, but so far they've remained as elusive as the original source who worked at the site of the objects' discovery. IF you hear of a name connected to Omni on this story, I'd appreciate if you'd pass it along to me. I'd like to talk to whoever this/these person/people is/are. Perhaps we could stop tripping on each others' work -- if the others do exist. The story is that these Omni writers have been harrassing the original source of this story terribly to the point where he is wary of talking to anyone. Bad news if true. But suppose they're not really from the magazine after all? Then who are they? And why are they so ardently pursuing this? All good reasons to check them out, so if you DO learn something about them, please let me know.

Because Omni did assign this story to me (I'm a freelancer who has worked for the magazine for many years now and you can check with editors there or look at back issues to see my byline to verify my claim to working for them), I owe them first priority on the story and pictures. I can speak of general info in the context of trying to learn more, but I can't ethically give away what they've hired me to get for them. -- Out of message space, see next one.

Part 2

If you've been following the posts here, you've probably seen my original messages asking for info on the story. Jerry Decker at KeelyNet apparently was the first person to post something about it but he doesn't have a lot more info than what you've heard.

1) Location: still undefined. One says 60 miles north of Ogden. Guy Kirkwood says there "aren't 60 miles of Utah" north of Ogden, but it's supposed to be IN Utah.

2) Site: supposed to be radioactive waste storage site but NRC knows of no such site in that area in Utah. Only one is 70-90miles west of Salt Lake.

3) Depth: supposed to have been found at 640 feet deep and 2 objects brought up (these are about 40 feet tall/long, so that's an enormous hole) but NRC says the typical nuclear waste storage depth is 150 feet and spokesmen there said they'd never heard of anyone going deeper than 300 feet, max, for such a site. Casts doubt on story.

4) Other possible sites have been suggested near the Ogden one: Amon, Idaho, or the Martin Thiokol plant at northern border of UT or Nevada. Main sources are adamant it's northern Utah, though.

5) Hierglyphics: supposedly the objects are covered in them and they look more Arabic than anything else. Linda Bird saw the photos of them displayed by Guy Kirkwood and she made a tracing of them and sent a copy of that tracing to me. It does indeed look Arabic. Kirkwood is supposed to be contacting experts to confirm this. I suggested he try the Epigraphic Society in San Diego, where they do specialize in ancient languages and especially proto-semitic or pre-Arabic. No word yet on results. The things are not completely covered in these 'glyphs but mostly covered, Kirkwood says.

6) Nefilim link: Kirkwood raised this point. He says they've been dated to a period which ties them in with the Nefilim. He did not give me any solid info to support that. It appears to be only a connection he himself is making. I have not confirmed from him yet whether he spoke of the writings (glyphs) being dated or the objects being dated. Need more info.

7) Peru: Kirkwood said one person to whom he displayed

these photos asked if they were the objects found in Peru. Kirkwood didn't know of anything like this there and the person told him he had seen pictures of what appeared to be an identical object with identical writings on it found in Peru. No confirmation.

There are other things...connections to ancient tunnels in Utah, inscriptions on the tunnel walls that match what's on the objects, the metal (silvery-gray -- looks like steel but is non ferrous & nonmagnetic) but the bottom line is that until I can speak to the Original Source on this, there is NO proof of any of it.

I have posted messages here in an effort to track down the story, to find that proof. I appreciate your healthy skepticism, and we should all retain a degree of skepticism -- even Kirkwood says so, and he's got the photos -- until we have some hard evidence.

If there has been any suggestion that I started this story, that is not correct. I have only been trying to track it down.

If you have further questions, please ask again and I will try to answer them as best I can.

I have been thinking recently about the Robert Lazar material relating to the element-115 antimatter reactors that he claimed to work on at "S-4" near Groom Lake, Nevada (Dreamland?) The antimatter reactors were alleged to be the drive source for some of the alien craft studied in a secret U.S. government base.

While I was tossing the information around in my head assessing it's validity, I decided to think about some of the possible implications if it were true. For the moment, I considered the information as valid and tried to see where it would take me.

It was an exercise in uncritical thinking, and I am well aware that it doesn't prove anything. I'm not trying to sell it to anyone and I don't mind seeing it ripped to shreds, but it is fun, and there is always the chance that something valid could come about as a result. What I am most interested in is feedback on the ideas and any current information on the Lazar material itself. Sorry in advance for the blatantly anthropomorphic stuff.

Here is some of Lazar's claims (gleaned from net postings and Timothy Good's book "Alien Liaison"):

- the U.S. government possesses at least 9 different alien space craft and some 500 lb (kg?) of element-115. 225 grams of element-115 are sufficient to power a reactor.
- the U.S. government has had "relations" with extraterrestrials who have cooperated at least partially in the U.S. attempt to use alien technology, either by providing it or by allowing us to keep what we recovered.
- the reactors produced a gravity wave when protons were fired at element-115. The gravity wave was then amplified and used to propel the "UFO" around the universe.
- one method of propulsion was to focus the gravity waves at a distant point in space and "pull" that point towards the ship together by bending space. When the gravity was turned off, space would "snap" back into position and the ship would be in the new position. A new position that may be very, very far from the original position.
- Lazar claimed that ships using this drive mechanism could travel much faster than the speed of light. (Although technically they wouldn't actually travel from A to B, they would instantaneously "snap" from A to B and their effective speed (distance/time) would be many times the speed of light.)
- the element-115 that all of this is supposed to be dependent on is claimed to be a naturally occurring (very heavy) element, but one that doesn't naturally occur around our particular point in the immediate universe.

Wild assumptions based on (temporarily) accepting the Lazar material:

(I am also temporarily accepting that there are several other intelligent civilizations in the universe. The Lazar material hints at this but doesn't explicitly state it as far as I remember.)

- the speed of light is not a barrier to the effective exploration of space, it is feasible to travel across galaxies quickly and efficiently.
- human scientists at Lazar's S-4 are capable of understanding the basic operations of the reactors which are based on an extension of currently known physics.
- If gravity can be used in this way, how long from now would we discover it, perhaps 100 years (when the electromagnetic, strong, and weak forces are unified with gravity? :-)
- it seems likely that a given civilization would "discover" the new physics necessary to design similar craft at a stage of development perhaps only a hundred or so years in "advance" of our own. Earlier if they were given examples to play with.
- if the aliens allowed us to keep these craft, they probably allow other civilizations on other planets to retain and analyze similar craft.
- other civilizations could even develop the technology at a point earlier in their development than us if they had the element-115 occurring naturally on their planet (imagine if our 1890's physicists had a chunk of the stuff.) The alien civilization could be traveling in space before they have developed other technologies.

Yeah, but does it explain anything?

Gross speculation based on wild assumptions generated by temporarily accepting highly suspect material:

- maybe the little grey buggers really don't have a clue about proper medical procedures. They may not have progressed that far in the medical department. Maybe they thought hypnotic memory suppression was a good idea at the time. Maybe they don't mind needles up their noses (so why would we?)
- perhaps the variety of (humanoid) alien body shapes reported over the years (fairies/gnomes as well) is the result of the huge number of different alien civilizations all traveling around the universe at the same time. (The ammonia-sucking jellyfish would presumably travel to ammonia rich planets, leaving the humanoid's to visit "humanoid-friendly" planets :-)
- perhaps some of the aliens are not advanced enough to avoid crashing their saucers.
- the aliens may not be advanced enough to avoid contradicting themselves. ("Pictures are forbidden" - "Hey come here, get your camera")
- different groups of aliens could have very different motives, good and bad. Imagine what the CIA would do 100 years from now if we had mastered interstellar travel. Would our motives, methods, morals, ethics, and nature change that drastically in 100 years. The insignias and uniforms witnessed on UFO occupants could be their equivalent of the CIA.

- maybe the observed cultural tracking of UFO shapes takes place because they are still coming out with newer, more advanced models. Maybe even borrowing from our technology (or attempting to blend in.)
- with so many alien civilizations capable of flying around the universe, there could be some kind of cosmic "police force" that enforces universal laws against interfering with "primitive" cultures ala "Star Trek". Any aliens we see or contact would therefore be rebels.
- SETI may not have found evidence of extraterrestrial life because the aliens have arrived several million years before their radio signals.
- the really advanced civilizations probably don't get caught.

I better quit before I lose all sense of reality.

Hey - maybe this is how the National Enquirer comes up with their stuff :-)
